Q1:

- i) The new regular expression retains letters, numbers, spaces, and some meaningful symbols.
- ii) I will use the 5-fold cross-validation provided by scikit-learn. This evaluation method can more stably measure the generalization ability of the model and avoid overestimating or underestimating

Q2 :

Under the default countervector configuration, all possible combinations were tried based on whether to retain special characters, whether to use NLTK or scikit-learn, whether to lowercase and perform stemming or lemmatization.

The best configuration obtained was to retain special characters, use NLTK's tokenize, use scikit-learn's stopwords, lowercase, and not use stemming or lemmatization.

Q3:

Regarding the evaluation method, I used StratifiedKFold from scikit-learn for 5-fold cross-validation, which can reduce the interference of data partitioning bias on model evaluation.

As for the evaluation metrics: Accuracy: It measures the proportion of correct predictions and is the most intuitive classification performance indicator. Macro-averaged F1-score: It is particularly important in multi-class classification problems as it can balance the attention to each class. Confusion Matrix: It helps to identify in which classes the model makes severe misjudgments. Precision/Recall: They are used to further analyze the model's performance on the minority class. After analyzing the dataset, we found that the distribution of the five topic labels is somewhat imbalanced. Therefore, I decided to use Macro F1-score as the main evaluation metric to take into account the classification ability of each category.

best model parameters and performance:
 best model: Logistic Regression (C=0.1, max_features=400)
 Macro F1: 0.8475, Accuracy: 0.8780

Q5:

As the result show, the best performance is Logistic Regression with C=0.1 and max_features with 400

Q2:

Set N=10 ,This ensures that each topic has the opportunity to be covered, while also preventing the recommendation list from being too long and thus affecting the quality of feedback.

For the quality of recommendations, I think precision@N and recall@N are the main indicators, which can represent the accuracy of the recommendations and reflect how many of the songs that users like are recommended.

Based on the results, the precision is quite good when $M \geq 20$. As for why the precision is also relatively high when $M = \text{all}$, I guess it's because the diversity of words in our text is not sufficient, so that the features related to the topic of all songs under a certain theme are mostly the same. Moreover, we used the topN strategy to build user profile, which is why the hit rate of recommendations performs like this.

Q1:

User feedback: By straightforwardly understanding the sentence meaning, the recommended songs seem to have a decent effect, but they lack rhythm and melody, making them feel rather awkward and unable to accurately express his preferences.
